Gesgapegiag celebrates Women's Day

Gilles Gagné

GESGAPEGIAG: - The Galgoasiet community hall was a busy place on Saturday, March 11 as Gesgapegiag Health and Community Services (GHCS) celebrated Women's Day with the help of a number of partner organizations.

Women were pampered with hair-styling, make-up, nail polish and massage and had the chance to visit information booths.

After a prayer by elder Romona Jerome and opening words from Chief Rod Larocque, Health Director Amanda Larocque welcomed the crowd. She noted that the day was dedicated to the memory of Pierrette Bernard who worked for GHCS for many years. "She stood up for women, and worked hard for the elders. She taught me how to be bold," Amanda said. Pierrette's son Kevin Debigaré accepted a plaque in her honour. More than 100 women took part in the event, which included many raffle prizes, a Zumba demonstration and presentations by a number of organizations such as Haven House, the Mi'gmawei Mawiomi Business Corporation, the Gesgapegiag Human Resources Development Commission, and the Gesgapegiag Working Group on Mental Health and Wellness. The latter is a new movement in the community to bring awareness about mental health and break the stigma. The day ended with a lovely meal so the ladies didn't have to cook and do the dishes!

Less than average road investments

Geneviève Gélinas

GASPÉ: – Transport Quebec will invest $112 million on the roads of the Gaspé Peninsula and Magdalen Islands for the two budgetary years starting in 2017 and ending in 2019. That represents an average of $56 million per year. It's 38% less than the average of the

The Haute-Gaspésie MRC, where Highway 132 was damaged by storms, will have a two-kilometer part of highway 132 rebuilt in Rivière-Claude. Some supporting walls will also be rebuilt between La Martre and Mont-Louis.

In 2015, former Transport minister Robert Poëti announced $108 million investments for the 2015-2017 period. The budget is slightly higher ($2 million per year) for the coming two years. However, Minister Sébastien Proulx said that he was announcing "16 million more". How is it possible? Last year, Quebec announced $96 million for the 2016-2018 period, which Mr. Proulx used as a reference period. How much was invested per year during the last years? SPEC called Transport Quebec, whose spokesperson was unable to answer and told us to file a request according to the access to information law, last ten years, which was about $90 million.

However, it has become extremely difficult to monitor the investments on roads in the region, since Transport Quebec isn't announcing them on a one-year basis anymore, but rather for two-year periods.

From 2017 to 2019, Transport Quebec will rebuild highway 132 over 2.4 kilometers in the Pabos Mills area of Chandler. The bridge over the barachois in Hope Town will also be reconstructed, announced the minister responsible for the region, Sébastien Proulx, on March 7 in New Carlisle.

GASPÉ: - The Business Gala called Merci Côte-de-Gaspé (Thank You Côte-de-Gaspé) will take place on May 13 starting at 5 p.m at the C.E Pouliot Polyvalent. More than 200 participants are expected to attend this second edition. Prizes in many categories will be offered such as commerce, innovation, social economy, tourism contribution, new business, employer of the year and personality of the year, to name but a few. "This event is a great gathering for the business world. It will celebrate the determination and the will to succeed of businesses and organizations in our area," explained, Frederic Côté, the president of the Gaspé Chamber of Commerce which is organizing the gala. "Taking the time to say thank you to employees is an important way to recognize their work and their contribution to the organization," said Martin Roussy, executive director of Radio-Gaspésie, a major partner of the Gala. The Town of Gaspé, Air Canada, and the SADC are some of the partners of the event.

Millions needed in Chandler

Thierry Haroun

CHANDLER: - The elected representatives of the Town of Chandler are crossing their fingers that the coming provincial budget will have enough money slated for infrastructure projects. There is so much to be done, explains Mayor Louisette Langlois. "Well, first we need to invest millions of dollars in sewage filters in Newport and Pabos because they don't meet the environment standards anymore. Another $2.5 million is needed to buy a new ice refrigerating system for Chandler's arena and another two million is also needed to transform the Newport arena into a Community Center. We just hope that the provincial budget will meet our requests," added Ms. Langlois

Over $400 million slated for social housing in Quebec

Thierry Haroun

PERCÉ: – Over the next two years over $400 million will be invested in social housing in the province. This announcement pleased Ambroise Henry, director of Groupe ressources en logements collectifs de la Gaspésie-les-îles, a regional board devoted to social housing construction and other related projects.

This recent announcement was made jointly by Quebec Municipal Affairs Minister, Martin Coiteux and his federal colleague responsible for Social Development, Jean-Yves Duclos.

They announced that both governments are investing more than $400 million in social housing projects for lowincome families in need of affordable units, seniors and victims of family violence.

The agreement between Ottawa and Quebec confirms that the federal government is slating $286 million and Quebec $121 million.

In detail, $48.4 million will go towards the construction of new projects, repairs and adapting affordable units for seniors. $22.2 million will go for construction and renovation projects relating to transition houses for people faced with family violence and lodging centers (Centre d'hébergement). Finally, $94.5 million is slated to support long-term repairs on lodging units and to finance energy saving projects in buildings that house affordable units.

Reaction

"It's good news. We were expecting an announcement in the upcoming federal budget, but I was surprised by such an announcement at this time of year. The other good news is that the Federal government is expected to produce the first housing development plan in more than 40 years," says Ambroise Henry.

More specifically, he hopes that these new investments will translate into a new Accès Logis Program (under the patronage of the Quebec government) better adapted to the needs and priorities of a region like ours. "The problem we've been faced with over the past few years with this program is that the financial share of the local community for the construction of a new affordable unit housing project has been raised substantially. It can reach 25% and even 50% in some cases which is too much of a burden for communities like ours. What we are asking, is that the new Accès Logis Program set the financial share of a community at 15% or 17%."

There are projects that could be underway soon. One consists of adding ten new units in Grande-Vallée at the Seniors' Residence (a project worth $2M) and another consists of building 30 new units (for seniors with loss of autonomy) in Chandler, a project worth $5.6M.

Police report

The police searched a Grande-Allée West Blvd residence and arrested a 60-year-old man who will probably be charged with multiple offences under the provincial Tobacco Tax Act. The police seized more than 8,000 contraband cigarettes and other elements of evidence.

The police acted on information from the public.

As scheduled, the trial of Réal Savoie, 54, from Nouvelle accused of the July 27, 1996 premeditated murder, sexual assault with a weapon and forcible confinement of Sonia Raymond began with jury selection on March 6 at the New Carlisle courthouse before Superior Court Judge Louis Dion.

The jury selection process started on March 6 and was completed on March 7. Seven men and five women were selected. The judge gave his instructions to the jury after the selection was completed.

Crown witnesses were heard on March 8, 9 and 10 and the trial will continue on Monday, March 13.

On March 9, a police investigator testified and informed the jury that a six-year-old girl witnessed the crime. On that day, in the company of her friend, the young girl was bicycling on the shoulder of Route 132, along the beach in Maria. She then noticed a man crouching over someone. The young girl told her mother what she had seen and the police were contacted. The young girl reviewed 513 pictures, picked out three pictures and identified the accused in one of the three pictures.

The trial is expected to last up to five weeks. When asked if the trial could last five weeks, Crown Prosecutor Gérald Maltais replied "many witnesses will be heard, and it will take whatever time it takes to have them heard."

Family Ties Community Luncheons for Seniors Who Eat Alone

The next luncheon will be Wednesday, March 22 at 12 p.m. followed by a social hour in the collective kitchen at Family Ties. Soup, dessert, a door prize and companionship are on the menu.

See you there!

Commentary

Gilles Gagné

43 years later!

On the rainy afternoon of July 30, 1974 at the Valcartier base of the Canadian Armed Forces, a live grenade exploded in a barrack where cadets aged 14 and 15 were conducting training on explosive devices and how to recognize them.

Six cadets were killed and 62 more were physically injured. Up to 130 people were at the activity and it can be assumed that the cadets and army officers not injured all suffered from post-traumatic stress disorder as well.

The training session was supposed to be held solely with inert grenades. For a reason that remains a mystery to this day, a live grenade found its way into a box of inert grenades.

The Valcartier tragedy made the news on a certain number of occasions since 1974. Those occasions were undoubtedly few and far between because it took almost 43 years for the Canadian Armed Forces to reach an agreement with the families of the cadets that died or were injured on July 30, 1974.

That agreement was also kind of imposed on the army because it wouldn't have occurred without the intervention of the Canadian Armed Forces ombudsman, Gary Walbourne, who decided in 2015 that the 130 people left behind, including the family members of the deceased cadets, had to get some support, be it physical, psychological or monetary. It took 18 months to negotiate a deal that could cost the Canadian government in the vicinity of $42 million.

The most striking element of the ordeal experienced by the cadets and their families comes from the fact that it took 41 years to make the country's government admit that an agreement was required. Have all Canadian governments since 1974 been sufficiently deprived of humanity to refrain from the will of dealing with such a no-brainer issue?

Other disturbing facts punctuated the 43-year-old saga. In July 1974, hours and days after the tragedy, the surviving cadets were questioned by army officers as if they were potentially guilty of the mishap that led one grenade to explode.

The cadets were also threatened to be sued if they talked about what had happened. In 1974, the cadets were "nothing" legally, with regards to the army because they were members. Officially, the Canadian Armed Forces didn't have to deal with their situation. Humane considerations were largely waved at the time.

An injured cadet in 1974, Michel Juneau-Katsuva, who nevertheless went on to have a career in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, points out that some youth who were left without support, later committed suicide, became homeless or simply never became functional adults, due to post-traumatic stress disorder. Some youths were paralyzed in the explosion and remain so to this day.

Mr. Juneau-Katsuya negotiated with the Canadian government following the 2015 report of Gary Walbourne. Former National Defence minister, Jason Kenney and current minister, Harjit Sajjan, a retired Minister Sajjan, upon announcing the agreement that will confer some psychological and financial support to the victims for the rest of their lives, apologized on behalf of the government, for the unnecessary pain and suffering experienced by the 1974 victims of the Valcartier tragedy.

Canada remains a country where life is better than in most regions of the world, on the average. However, the Valcartier tragedy shows us that our humanity should never be taken for granted. We, individually and as a society, should always be vigilant in detecting such cases of injustice.

There are several cases left to resolve, some of them even worse than the Valcartier incident, like the disappearance and murder of 1,200 indigenous women. Tackling those issues promptly and using compassion will prevent us from wondering a few years down the road why we didn't deal with them way faster.

Suzanne Briand to ride again

Jeanie LeLacheur

GASPÉ: - How does one decide to take part in a 200 plus kilometre bike ride to raise money for cancer research you might ask. "Just a coincidence," says Suzanne Briand about her decision to take part in the 8th Annual Enbridge Ride to Conquer Cancer. "I saw an ad, requested the information by phone and that was it."

This dynamic woman having seen the devastation of this awful disease was admittedly "wanting to find something to call my own, something to make me feel motivated." That something turned out to be the 2016 Enbridge Ride to Conquer Cancer which is billed as is an EPIC, two-day cycling event spanning over 200 kilometres throughout Quebec's picturesque countryside. Needing only motivation, a bike and a helmet.

So with a dream to cycle over 200 km for a great cause and a plan to raise the $2,500 pledge needed to take part, Suzanne bought a bike and got to work. Once the decision was made Suzanne says, "things like quality

Spring forward to a safer home by replacing smoke alarms

(NC) For decades we've been reminded to install fresh batteries in smoke and carbon monoxide alarms when we change our clocks every spring and fall. It's life-saving advice, because working smoke alarms are known to double the chances of a safe escape in a fire emergency.

But a home safety expert says one more critical safety check should be added.

"Power up your alarms, yes. But, also understand that alarms have a lifespan. They do not last forever," says Carol Heller of Kidde, Canada's #1 alarm manufacturer. "Over time, sensors can be affected by pet hair, cooking smoke and dust. So, check the age of your alarms before installing fresh batteries. You don't want to put new batteries into outdated alarms."

Heller also reminds that the National Fire Protection Association recommends replacing all smoke alarms every 10 years, whether battery powered or hardwired. Have working smoke alarms on every floor and inside bed-choose an alarm with a hush feature that lets you quiet the alarm while you clear the air.

If you're concerned about forgetting to replace batteries on time, don't be --- technology is reducing the need to change smoke alarm batteries at all.

"New Kidde worry-free alarm models have a sealed battery that lasts 10 years from installation. That means no battery to replace for the alarm's entire lifespan."

Back in the day, New Carlisle was quite a busy place, much busier than it is now. There were a lot of stores back then. In town we had Legresley's big store where the CASA building is now. They had the whole building and every floor had something different on it.

Then there was the LeGrand Store, which used to be by the post office and Arsenault's on the south side of the road which had a butcher shop. There was also George Babin's store which also had a butcher shop and was next door to where Mark Gallibois now lives. fully functional back then. There was the one we now call the Rock Wharf, below the Jail, which used to have a warehouse. Ships brought in different things like molasses and pulpwood and piled it all up in the field. Archie Gilker and Cecil Beebe would sell pulpwood from there.

Over the years the wharves deteriorated and sandbars built up and to save a little bit of the land, they put rock in there. The harbour, the one below the high school, used to be a fishing harbour. Harris Gilker, Joe Flowers and others all had these put-put motor boats and they would come right up the middle and dock inside. But then with all the waste and the weather changing and the tides, the sand built up. It was quite the busy spot; there were fishing lodges there and a lot of fishing boats. So the two wharves were quite busy. New Carlisle was sure different and busy then!

The Murdochville strike: the workers' awakening

Geneviève Gélinas

GASPÉ: - 60 years ago, on March 10, 1957, approximately 1,000 workers from the Gaspé Copper Mines started a strike. Seven months and two deaths later, they ended it without any gain. However, without their fight, which led to better protection of union rights, the Quiet Revolution could have been the Bloody Revolution, states historian Jean-Marie Thibeault.

In 1953, Murdochville was founded in the heart of the Gaspé peninsula, to exploit copper. The mine, the concentrator and the smelter attracted workers from the whole of the Gaspé. In 1956, after unsuccessful attempts, the Metallos union asked for certification again, with the support of more than 80% of the workers.

The Gaspé Copper Mines didn't want this union. Under put up a tent in the parking lot of the smelter. They played music to keep their spirits up and to annoy the managers who camped in the offices.

The strike was illegal, because the union wasn't recognized. On April 12, an injunction forbid having a picket line. Strikers' wives took over. In July, policemen intercepted six women protesters and snatched their signs. The only woman who didn't have a baby in a pram started to run. A policeman caught her. She spent a night in jail, charged for "assault on a policeman."

A first death

Tension increased. On April 25, 80 provincial policemen arrived in Murdochville, on top of the 25 already there. On July 12, a small group of strikers blasted the tailing dam pipe. One of them, Hervé were asked: do you want a job in mining? They were put on a school bus from Toronto to Murdochville, on gravel roads. In Sainte-Anne-des-the Maurice Duplessis Government, unionists were considered communists and were given bad press. So union recognition was the main reason for the strike, also motivated by the lack of security for workers.

Bernatchez, died of his wounds.

Mr. Thibeault suspected one of the blasters, Nestor Henley, to have been an agitator working for the company. "He was an extremist striker. He was always talking about The company put the planting bombs. He went so far that the other strikers had to hold him. After the blasting, he disappeared. Then he was found in the offices of Noranda Mines (the parent company) in Toronto and he became a witness for the company. Did he switch sides? Or was he an undercover agent who was inciting other strikers on purpose?" In the meanwhile, production resumed on April 29, with scabs. Among them, was a group of Hungarians who fled their country invaded by USSR. The company recruited them in Toronto. "They didn't speak English or French. They

Monts (100 km before Murdochville), they were told: there were communists who were striking. If they were communists, to get out of the bus. If they were democrats, stay," Mr. Thibeault reports.

The strikers put up a tent in the parking lot of the smelter. They played loud music to keep their spirits up and to annoy the managers who camped in the offices.

On August 19, about 500 protesters, among them wellknown personalities such as Michel Chartrand, Pierre-Elliot Trudeau and René Lévesque, walked into Murdochville. Rocks fell on the protesters, from a hill where scabs were standing and "security officers" hired by the company.

A second death

After the protesters' departure, those "security officers" damaged about thirty cars and threw the furniture and equipment out of the union office window. They ran after some strikers, among them Edgar Fortin, who took refuge in his house. As the officers threw rocks, "he took his gun, and shot at their feet. Then he went in his house and suffered a heart attack. The company doctor said that he died naturally. I say that he died of fear," Mr. Thibeault states.

On October 7, the 200 remaining strikers stopped the strike. "It was a total defeat at the individual level, the historian says. But at the collective level, the Murdochville strike was the workers' awakening."

Duplessis died two years after the end of the strike. Paul Sauvé became Premier. "He was quick to get Bill 8 passed, also called, Théo Gagné Law or Gaspesians' Law," reminds Mr. Thibeault. This law prohibited employee dismissals because of their union activities. It also reformed the Labour relations commission, which became independant from the Government.

"The Murdochville example made the government and the companies understand that workers are human beings," says Mr. Thibeault. He dares not imagine what the 1960s and 1970s could have looked like. "the worst years of confrontation with the working class, if they had gone on dealing with workers as they had dealt with Murdochville workers."

breaks on the recognition file with lengthy legal proceedings. Mr. Thibeault even said that Gaspé Copper Mines "sought a fight " with the union. In the days before the strike, the Gaspé Copper Mines brought trucks filled with food, stoves and beds, "as if to withstand a siege." On March 8, union president, Théo Gagné was laid-off, on the unlikely pretext of a lack of work.

On March 10, workers confirmed the vote in favour of strike action, first voted in September. The next day, production stopped. The strikers

Murdochville: a long road to union certification

Geneviève Gélinas

PABOS: – After the 1957 strike, Aurélien Hautcœur rolled up his sleeves and started persuading former strikebreakers to join the Metallos union. A long-term job, done door to door under the cover of a peddler, led to the recognition of the union in 1965.

Mr. Hautcœur was 17 years old when he was hired by the Gaspé Copper Mines. "When I arrived, we had to speak English because everything was in English." He didn't know much English, but had prepared a few words for the Anglophone manager who was to question him. "All I had in mind was to cheat about my age. When he asked me 'what's your name?', I answered 'Eighteen!'"

Mr. Hautcœur, who is now 79 years old, worked at several different jobs in Murdochville. He worked as a truck driver, heavy equipment operator, driller and instructor. During his first years, he says the working conditions were unsafe. "I saw four deaths in work accidents in the same week. There was a pool of water, not protected and covered with dust. A worker drowned in it. Another one died crushed under a small cart full of rocks. A bulldozer fell from a height and the driver was almost sawed in half. A metal piece detached from the crusher and killed two workers," he lists.

One day, Mr. Hautcœur was driving a company truck. "The brakes failed. I had to stop on a pillar." He told a foreman, who answered: "If wou don't want to drive it, get upstairs to get your time (your last pay)." "I replied that I was going to file a report to the Labour relations commission." He was able to keep his job, but was assigned to opening and closing a door for trucks, which he considered a punishment.

After the strike of 1957, Mr. Hautcœur resumed working at the mine and became a part-time door-to-door salesperson for Rawleigh Products, which sell food and drugs. "It allowed me to meet with the scabs. At the same time, I had them sign union cards. I would tell them that we had to get organized, because it wasn't safe enough. I didn' call them 'scabs'. I would tell them that it wasn't their fault, that they didn't know what was going on at the time of the strike."

In 1965, Mr. Hautcœur had gathered cards from 50% of the workers, plus 10 others. "I asked Émile Boudreau (a Metallos representative) to come. We counted, and we had enough to file an application for union certification. In the afternoon, I told the company that I was taking my afternoon off for personal reasons and I had workers sign 14 more cards. In case there were any resignations, I would have them." Mr. Hautcœur left Gaspé Copper Mines in 1975. Thereafter, he thinks that he was blacklisted because of his union activities. Unable to find a job, he worked at several self-employed professions: grocer, carpenter, snow removal contractor, potato grower and raspberry grower.

The modernization of the smelter wouldn't be profitable enough, explains Mr. Pannell. BONAVENTURE: - Anyone who is familiar with local markets and artisan events on the Gaspé Coast has surely met up with Hélène Bourassa once or twice. She is a staple on that circuit and participates in over 25 events a year. Her regular presence allows her customers to seek her out and stock up on the many remedies that she has been preparing for over twenty years now.

Hélène Bourassa was born in Jonquière but her love affair with the Gaspésie began as a young girl, when she used to accompany her father on fishing trips to the region.

Thirty years ago, upon graduating from CEGEP, she and her boyfriend from that time decided, at Hélène's suggestion, to explore the career opportunities that might be available to them in the Gaspé region. Mere weeks after their arrival, they were both employed with the Centre de Réadaptation in Bonaventure as specialized educators. During her time there, Hélène worked with many people from the English community throughout her territory which covered New Carlisle to Port Daniel.

Hélène became interested in herbalism in the early 80s. Herbalism is a traditional art that uses a combination of plants, flowers, mosses and other natural ingredients in the formation of natural medicines. It is not until the mid 90s however that she decided to pursue her interests more seriously.

Over three years, Hélène studied the science of traditional and natural medicines and in 1996 became an accredited herbalist and therapist.

In 1995 Hélène Bourassa launched Heboristerie Écho-Santé Bonaventure. She prepared her first garden of medicinal plants in 1997 which would be the initial stepping stone in building up her dispensary. "I harvest from my garden, but I also harvest from the woods and other natural environments. Every season has something to offer, Winter, just as in Spring," she explains.

Hélène's primary goal as an herbalist has been to make natural medicines readily available to the masses. "There is a revived interest in medicines of this kind but the concept is far from new. Natural medicines have been used through all of time and in all cultures. There was a time when there was a herbalist in every village. Many conventional and every day medicines such as aspirin were derived from natural sources."

In addition to the fabrication of her products, Hélène Bourassa has, over the years, offered a variety of workshops and training sessions to different groups seeking expertise and knowledge in the harvesting, preparation, use and application of natural remedies. "I like to focus on the health of the family," she explains. While some might be wary of incorporating natural medicines in their day-to-day, it is important to underline that it remains an industry that is taken very seriously. "I am continuously upgrading. I take new courses or exchange best practices with others," explains Hélène. She is also the regional representative for the Guilde des herboristes du Québec. "We are very fortunate to have this organization in Ouébec. The group meets regularly and helps valorize and promote herbal medicines but also serves as a consultation group to others

With time, the support of the community and friends as well as the use of natural medicines, Hélène rose from the ashes and found her way back. Hazel McCallion: A life with a purpose

Hazel McCallion is ours – a native of the Gaspé Peninsula, born and raised in Port

Daniel, QC. She was born Hazel Journeau on Valentine's Day, 1921. Her family owned a fishing and canning company here. Hazel was the longest serving mayor in all Canadian history. She recently celebrated her 96th birthday and is still active in her community.

Hazel was always feisty and displayed a strong, winning personality. She played hockey with her sisters when she was a little girl here on the coast. Of course, she played forward. When she moved to Montreal she played for a semi-professional women's team. Hockey is a passion she still supports. Don Cherry, a friend, said at a past birthday celebration, referring to her strong electoral support, that 98% of the residents of Mississauga voted for her and that he was going out to look for the 2% that had not.

Hazel was mayor for 36 years. Her style has been defined as forthright and no-nonsense. Her career was not without controversy, mind you, but the overwhelming majority of voters always continued to support her. She did not accept donations for her political campaigns, but instead asked her supporters to donate the money to a favourite charity.

After graduating from high school, Hazel attended business and secretarial college in Quebec City and Montreal. She wanted to attend university but could not afford it at the time. In 1942 she was transferred to the Toronto office of her Montreal firm. Almost immediately she became active in several projects in her community: Lakeview Generating Station, British American Refinery and a pilot project for the Tar Sands in Alberta. She worked for that company for 19 years.

She met Sam McCallion, was married and had three children: Peter, Linda and Paul. She has strong faith and is a member of the Anglican church and she often gives credit to her faith for giving her the immense energy required for her many years of service as a politician. She always liked to do her own housework because, she said, it gives you exercise and keeps you humble.

Her political life began in 1967 when she became Chairperson of the Streetsville Planning Board. Soon after that she was elected Mayor of Streetsville. She was a political meteor. She became mayor of Mississauga in 1978, narrowly defeating a popular incumbent. She was acclaimed in 1980, re-elected in 1991, 1994, 2000, 2003, 2006 and 2010. Under her leadership, Mississauga did not have to borrow money from the time of her election in 1978 and was debt-free.

which usually leads to long delays.

Before 2013, the investments on roads used to be announced for one year. In 2013, the Parti québécois began to announce them over two-year periods. At that time, the budgets were falling after big years of investments from 2009 to 2012 (See the chart).

The Marois government announced $168 million from 2013 to 2015, an average of $84 million per year, which meant a 34% decrease between 2012 and 2013. The PQ was defeated in April 2014 and the Liberal Party made a new announcement in the summer of 2014. The investments were decreasing again. Transport Quebec was to spend $119.5 million over two years from 2014 to 2016, that is to say an average of $54 million per year, another decrease of 35%.

Hazel McCallion always held the philosophy that a city should be run like a business. Likely this view was shaped by her family's background as successful business people here on the Gaspé combined with her education in the field of business.

She has received many awards and has been a strong supporter of many charities. Some of her accolades include: World Leadership Award, Canadian Family Values Award, Robert Baldwin Award for Career Achievement, Honorary Doctorate of Laws and many community service awards.

At a recent birthday gala, this tribute was made: "Mayor Mc-Callion is a true inspiration to us all. Through her extraordinary terms as Mayor of Mississauga, her outstanding leadership, volunteerism and philanthropy have become well known both nationally and internationally."

Mississauga might like to claim Hazel McCallion as their own, but we Gaspesians know that her strength, no-nonsense views and perseverance come from her roots here on the Gaspé Peninsula.

So in September Suzanne started a training program which included daily climbs on Mount Bechervaise. She quickly set up a fundraising campaign which ended with over $3,100 in donations to the Segal Cancer Center of the Jewish General Hospital. The Enbridge Ride to Conquer Cancer is currently Quebec's largest cycling fundraiser and the 2016 edition in which Suzanne took part had 1,222 participants raise 4.4 million collectively.

So in July of last summer, Suzanne left Gaspé with her bike and helmet and drove to Montreal to begin the 8th Annual Enbridge Ride to Conquer Cancer. She left Montreal on July 9 to bike to Quebec City a stretch of more than 200 km over two days. Along with one thousand fellow bikers she perservered through days filled with rain and shine, hills and valleys, cold, and not without a little Sometimes it was pain. smooth sailing and sometimes she pushed to the very limits. Spec gets around...

Suzanne Legouffe-Jerome couldn't resist bringing her SPEC on her first excursion south. It was the first time she ever flew on an airplane. She traveled to Veradaro, Cuba with her friend Amy Martin and was happy to stand on this beautiful, sandy beach holding the SPEC.

Suzanne was grateful to Amy for helping her organize this wonderful trip. "It made one of my dreams come true, I am forever grateful," Suzanne told SPEC.

Suzanne works in Gesgapegiag for Health and Community Services.

What's This Artifact?

Answer: Antique Photo Viewer. The person using this item would put the photos in the holder

Why do we say.... By Gary Briand

"I'll tell you on the qt." We are all familiar with the expression which indicates reliable information given under strict confidentiality. But how did the expression come to be? Perhaps the qt is simply the first and last letter of the word "quiet".

It is clear, however, that the expression was recorded first in 1884 by the Irish novelist George Moore. In A Mummer's Wife a conversation occurs between the character Kate and Miss Mender. Kate says: "'Mr. Lennox will be here on Monday. I've just got a letter from him.' 'Oh, I'm so glad; for perhaps, this time, it will be possible to have one spree on the strict qt.'

Kate was thinking of exactly the same thing but Miss Mender's crude expression took the desire out of her heart and she remained silent."

Why George Moore or Kate thought of "qt" as crude, I don't know. Soon after and up to our time "on the qt" became very respectable and proper and much occurring.
